"Carrying the Cross," by Myriams-Fotos on Pixabay

A new semester of classes has begun at Duke, and we extend God's welcome to you. This morning's Scripture readings show the radical commitment and cost required to be a disciple of Jesus. The prophet Jeremiah is shown the Lord's sovereignty, as we too must accept God's authority to shape our lives. Paul writes a deeply personal letter to Philemon, urging him to choose the difficult forgiveness and reconciliation that Jesus teaches. In Luke's Gospel, Jesus asks us to count the cost of following him. Jesus' love for us took him to the cross, and that costly love shapes our journey together as the family of God.

The congregation is invited to reflect silently during the prelude as a time of prayer and meditation. The Chapel welcomes families with children. If at any time during the service your child needs a place for active play, please know there is a nursery in the Chapel basement.

LEARNING THE LITURGY OF THE CHAPEL

Whenever they take place, worship services have some kind of internal order and structure. Some worship is called “high church” (formal); some is called “low church” (informal). Some worship services are labeled “traditional,” while others are labeled “contemporary.” Regardless of the seeming formality or informality of a service, in most churches a pattern often exists that characterizes the weekly gathering for worship. Another name for this service structure is “liturgy.”

Duke Chapel offers an interdenominational worship that is not linked to one particular denominational pattern or liturgy. The structure of Duke Chapel worship provides a framework for the praise and worship of God in Jesus through the Spirit. The particular way we order our worship draws from the earliest traditions of the church and is meant to enable all those who have gathered together to participate in common acts of worshipping God. In this way, the liturgy is the means by which the whole community participates in worship. Liturgy becomes everyone’s activity, everyone’s work. In an effort to bridge faith and learning in weekly worship, we will regularly include information in the bulletin about particular aspects of our liturgy. We invite you to learn why we do what we do, to ask questions, and to find ways to participate more deeply in worship as together we encounter our triune God: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.
